Braddock High School Met Defeat Here This Morning

The Monessen High school added another to their long string of victories this morning at the Page grounds when they won from the fast Braddock team by a score of 20 to 0. The game was exciting from beginning to end, but never was the local's goal in danger. Features of the game were long end runs of Williams and Conti, both of whom gained 40 yards before they were downed. Conti's run was the most spectacular, as he eluded five of the opposing players before he was finally brought to the ground.

Spiegel at right half was the star for the visitors and shared honors with Mervis, the Braddock full back. He had speed to burn but was unable to get away from the local linesman, who after the first half, held like a stone wall. At Charleroi recently Speigel got away for a 98 yard run for a touchdown. McQuaide was the stonewall on the local's line and it was due to his superb work that the visitors finally gave up their attack on the line. Monessen tried out several trick formations and long forward passes with good effect and it is hoped that with another solid week of practice they will be able to win from Charleroi and claim the championship of the valley.

Frazier made the first two touchdowns for Monessen on short line runs while Newhouse carried the ball over for the final touchdown on a forward pass with only five seconds to play. The visitors are considered one of the best teams in the Pittsburgh district having met such aggregations as Central and Wilkinsburg High. They were defeated early in the season by Charleroi by a score of 27 to 6.

Monessen Leads

Monessen leads the towns of the upper Monongahela valley with a population of 20,191 according to an estimated census report recently issued by the United States Census Bureau. Charleroi is credited with 11,553, Washington 21,160, Uniontown 19,960 and Connellsville 15,034. It is evident that Monongahela is below the 8,000 mark as no reports are made on towns or cities below that mark, and Donora is not mentioned.

Must Attend School

The U. S. Department of Labor has notified all alien candidates for either first or final naturalization papers that they must attend night school if any is conducted in their respective communities before the papers will be granted. As night school is being conducted in Monessen, foreigners who hope to become Americans are affected by this ruling and should enroll as students.

Local Court Cases

John Barna, of Monessen, charged with illegal liquor selling, was found guilty. He was tried before Judge Doty and in the course of the trial, the prosecutor, F. C. Plinston, brought in a half gallon of whiskey which he bought from Barna, August 13, 1915, for $1.50. He made the information himself and not on information furnished. The glass jug of whiskey was given to the jury and after they returned their verdict in open court, it was taken by Clerk of Courts James B. Gallagher who took it to his office in the basement of the court house where it will be permitted to "age."

George Latta, the local man who stabbed Alexander Yonko on the right cheek and on both shoulders, was found guilty and was sentenced to pay a $1 fine, the costs of prosecution, and go to the workhouse five months. The crime was committed in Yonko's house, October 30, 1915. Latta was acquitted on a charge of gun toting although a revolver with sharp pointed bullets is alleged to have dropped on the floor at the time the crime was committed.

Boxing Bout Monday

The largest crowd that ever attended a boxing show in Charleroi is expected at the Charleroi rink Monday if present indications prove true, as the orders for tickets have been much above former advance sales this season. Business men who found it impossible to attend the Saturday ninght shows are planning to take advantage of this Monday night affair and a number of new fight fans are expected at the ringside. The local club has carded one of their best shows this season. The main bout will bring together two boys that the fans have been waiting to see a long time, Swats Adamson of Brownsville and Red Robinson of Pittsburgh. Billy Winkler and K. O. Brennan will appear in the semi-final. Young Jones will box Johnny Cooper in the second bout and Mickey Vicgos and Earl Regan will appear in the first.

H., James Dacey, state president of the A. O. H., Mrs. Butts, Past President of the Auxiliary and Miss Jones of Pittsburgh.

This promises to be the greatest meeting of the auxiliary in the valley for a number of years and the local committee in charge of the affair will leave nothing undone towards making the visitors welcome to the city.

Local Boy Stars

Henry L.Teeters, of this city, of the U. S. S. Arkansas, is creating quite a furore in naval football circles, according to a letter received in Pittsburgh. Commander John Allen, one of the Navy Young Men's Christian association, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes of the doings of Teeters in a most praiseworthy manner, saying that his work has been largely responsible for the U. S. S. team being the champions of the first division. He also goes on to say that Pittsburgh boys have been causing sensations on naval ball teams for the past several years. Teeters was home this summer on a short furlough and spoke highly of his treatment on board the Arkansas. He is playing in the backfield for the team and his work has attracted the attention of all naval critics.

Open Season

The Home Stragglers journeyed to Monongahela last evening where they opened their 1915-16 basketball season by trouncing the fast Monongahela Juniors team in a game which kept the spectators at the heighth of excitement through the whole game. The game was an exceptionally fast one and the team work of the local boys completely overwhelmed the Monongahela boys. Hannigan's team work and sensational shooting from all angles of the floor was nothing short of sensational. This team work and shooting kept the game going fast all the time. The guard work of the local guards, Rosenthal and Hutchinson doing excellent work in these departments, while Rosenthal made a field goal from the center of the floor which brought the crowd to their feet. The lineup:

Monessen—15		Monongahela—7

Hutchinson	G	Kirby

Fouls—Murray, 1, Haversack, 1. Goals—Volker, 1, Wolf, 2, Hannigan, 2, Murray, 2, Rosenthal, 1, Hutchinson, 1, McAnnintch 1.

This organization is considered one of the best musical organizations in the valley and with the addition of their new uniforms just received through Cuddy & Sbrocco, they will make a neat appearance and will no doubt be in great demand for future affairs.

John Jannotta is director of the band, P. Americo, president and Joseph Monack, treasurer.

E. H. Conklin

"The Desire or All Nations Shall Come" is the subject of the lecture to be given by E. H. Conklin, a local Bible scholar, Sunday, November 14 at 3 p. m. in Kelly's hall.

"In view of the present great distress of many nations caused by the terible war which is now raging throughout Europe, many wonder if the prophet Haggai's wonderful vision could ever have been fulfilled. Dare even Christians, let alone "all nations" express such a hope as this! What saith the Scriptures?

A cordial invitation is extended to the public to hear this interesting and helpful lecture next Sunday. All is free. 1t fp

Large Crowd Pleased With Home Talent Last Night

The High school auditorium was comfortably filled last evening when the curtain was raised on the first act of "Facing the Music," a three act comedy given by the Monessen Auxiliary of the Monessen-Charleroi hospital, by local talent and for over two hours the audience was kept in an uproar with the amusing situations that arose among the Smiths, the principals of the cast.

There was no slip nor an interruption to mar the evening's entertainment, and the young thespians displayed great ability behind the footlights and were roundly applauded for their efforts, which chowed the result of careful training under Director Mr. James S. Russell. A beautiful stage setting added to the evening's entertainment, this part being the work of Mr. Russell and Mr. Williams.

No individual mention can be made of the various members who took part in the play as each character was handled in a manner that reflected credit on their ability. Hugh Smyth, J. M. Lavrnic, W. O. Williams and Miss Amelia Patrick of this city shared honors with the Charleroi members of the cast including Mrs. Willis McCook, Jr., Mrs. James Russell, Miss Cecelia McDermott, Horace Nutt and Bannister Roberts.

The High school orchestra furnished music for the occasion and during the intermission Miss Margaret E. Grimm of Braddock, entertained the audience with several pleasing soprano solos. Owing to the sudden illness of Watson Johns, the Sterling quartet was unable to appear, but in their stead. Chester C. Humphreys sang several tenor solos.

Beware of The Catalogue

The editor of every local newspaper in the country has been free in the use of the slogan "Trade at Home." His clear understanding of the conditions of his community make it plain to his mind that if his town or city had what was naturally due it, that the local merchants would do a larger business; and while the editor is notoriously an unselfish member of society, he cannot help knowing that he has suffered with the rest of the community, and that his advertising columns have been thinned out by the mail order houses, the department stores, and the balance of that sort of fungus that drains the commercial and industrial vitality of the small towns and cities.

Examination shows that the local merchant sells staple articles of merchandise that are called for by name, and he maintains the resale prices fixed by manufacturers—no matter whether the article is breakfast food, jewelry, drugs, shoes, shirts or socks; and he makes a reasonable profit. As a "bait" mail order houses cut prices on some of these staple articles, in order to make it appear that they sell cheaper; but their greatest effort is made to sell goods which they claim to be "just as good," but which are in most cases of inferior quality, at prices far above their actual worth. The local merchant must either do an honorable business or close up shop. His principal competitor is the catalogue house and the mail order man, and these men actually make a larger percentage of profit out of their sales than the local merchant, who is so often mistakenly accused of overcharging. An outraged public rebelled against the old time custom of barter and bargain, and forced the one-priced system to be established in reputable merchandising, but the mail order and catalogue houses are "beating the old game" in a new way. Those are reasons why the Federal Trade Commission regards "price maintenance" as the biggest question it has to handle. It is expected that the Commission and Congress will sooner or later put an end to the methods of cut-throat merchandising which are playing havoc with the small communities, and doing no good to the large places, or to anyone else excepting the men engaged in these unworthy practices.

THE BROKEN COIN

A Story of Mystery and Adventure

By EMERSON HOUGH

From the Scenario by GRACE CUNARD

COPYRIGHT, 1915, BY WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

Novelized From the Motion Picture Drama of the Same Name, Produced by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

CHAPTER LXIX.

The Sacred Fire.

No intimation could come to anyone in the two rival kingdoms as to the whereabouts of those two persons of most importance in the swift drama of those days—Kitty and Count Frederick. They had disappeared utterly and left no trace. With them had passed all hope of the solution of the riddle of the missing Gretzhoffen coin. If either of these two kingdoms should march against the other, if its armies should lay level with the earth the battlements and towers of its enemy—why, that would but bury the deeper the secret which alone animated either in the quest of conquest.

As for any offense against Grahoffen, however, what could Michael the weak have done now, with his right hand man, his ablest general, his best man of affairs, gone? He hesitated as to means of the offensive, just as his chief rival pondered the results possible, even of a successful offensive.

Meantime, the truth remained that the key to all this coil was absent, nor was she apt to return. Kitty Gray certainly must cherish a keen memory of injuries she had known on these shores. The armies of America might come back, the ships of America might anchor in these ports, their guns might exact apology or tribute—but Kitty Gray herself would not return, that was sure. Therefore affairs halted. The battle was arrested as though the sun had halted midway of the heavens in a modern Ajalon.

Yet, not so far away, as actual distance is measured, the two principals of this play still lived. Kitty and Count Frederick were separated from the rival kingdoms by not so many leagues of the sea, yet they knew not where they were more than did any of these others. The sea which stretched between the two lands was narrow enough in fact, yet potentially it lay immeasurably wide.

As to the secrets of the rival kingdoms which they had left behind, neither of these two much concerned himself. There were other things which concerned each vastly more.

When Count Frederick hastened away from the side of the sacrificial fire in the search of the woman who had come so near being its victim, he was overlooked at the moment alike by the natives who had accompanied him thither and by the inhabitants of the village which they had surprised. These were rival factions, or rival tribes upon the island, and for the time their ancient hatred made them forget the presence of the white man. They fell upon each other fiercely, and in the swift clash of arms all else was overlooked. Perhaps they remembered the potency of the white man's weapons. Their own weapons none the less would serve for a skin whose color they understood. With much cheerfulness they addressed themselves to the task of mutual mutilation.

The conflict swayed here and there until at length the villagers seemed to have the best of the invaders. The latter now remembering their white leader, broke off toward the forest, hotly pursued by their antagonists. Thus at length they all, a mixed array of fighting men, found themselves at the brink of the cavern where but recently Count Frederick had followed the trail of Kitty Gray and her captor. They also plunged down the slope, still mingled, still fighting, so that presently there might have been heard deep within the subterranean cavern the clash of spear or shield, and the thud of war clubs against human skulls.

By this time Kitty Gray had been rescued from the immediate peril which had threatened. When Count Frederick called out, the half-witted sailor turned toward him, and hesitated half an instant. With swift instinct, Kitty's fingers found a vulnerable place in her assailant's eyes, and as he roared in pain, she pulled herself free from him and sprang down and back into the arms of Count Frederick, who caught her close, murmuring some words with whose meaning she was well content.

"My heart, my life!" he exclaimed even as he pushed her back of him and faced the strange being from whom she had escaped.

Once more Kitty felt surge across her the feeling that after all, she was weak, and always must be weak; whereas, he, her late enemy, was strong and always would be strong. She was content to cower down behind him and leave the event to him.

The noise of the oncoming melee behind them grew in volume now as Count Frederick turned to face the shaggy figure of the man who but now had been the captor of Kitty Gray. The muzzle of the pistol pressing to his face spoke louder than any words—seemed, indeed, to restore to him a part of the reason he had lost through dwelling here among the savages, on a shore upon which he had been cast unknown years earlier. He threw up his hands now. "Avast, there, captain!" he cried. "I surrender!"

"Who are you?" demanded Count Frederick. "Or what are you?"

The half-demented creature passed a hand across his face. "Blessed if I could tell you the truth about that, sir" he said, "and that's the truth. But seems to me I remember I was once

"Look! a Sail!" Exclaimed Count Frederick.

Old Jimmy Wainwright of the ship Adventure, out of Clyde. It's maybe we were cast away somewhere, years since, and I'm thinking Adam was then a boy. Belay all! Friend, captain, your honor, don't shoot old Jimmy Wainwright, if so be I am him."

"But what are you doing down here under the earth, man?"

"Captain, your honor, sir, I came here to live safe. I kill some of them black folks once in a while. They think I'm crazy, and maybe they're right. How can I tell, captain, your honor, sir?"

"You know this place?" exclaimed Frederick. "Thus far we are safe, but listen to them coming."

"Ay, ay, sir; fighting like cats and dogs. They always do. We must cut and run, or they'll kill us all, and put us in the big fire yonder. Don't I know? I've seed sights a plenty, up there. I couldn't a-beared to seen the white lady burned."

"Lead on!" said Frederick, quickly. "We must hide, or it will be too late."

"This way, captain, your honor, sir! And bear a hand lively!"

Count Frederick and Kitty Gray followed him as he fled deeper into the cavernous interior of the lava hill. They turned corner after corner, until at length the sounds of the pursuit became fainter and died away far at the rear.

"'Ere's my 'ome, sir," began the old sailor at last, as they paused before a rude cabin, which showed some animal-like proof of human occupancy. "We'll be safe 'ere, I'm thinking."

But they were not safe for long. The keen instinct of the savage trailers, hot in the blood lust which now possessed them, brought them on ultimately along the trail, and to its end. They heard the savage shouts of their pursuers gaining in volume, heard the thud of their bare feet on the rocky floors. A moment, and the yelling band stood before the entrance to their cavern.

The natives were spearmen, and their shafts were cast with strength and accuracy. Those beleaguered ones had no shields with which to parry such weapons, and yet for one instant a barrier was offered to the assault.

With a savage, half-animal roar, the old sailor—whose full history never was to be known—cast himself in front of his new friend, opposing his shaggy breast to the leveled spears. He fell pierced by a dozen shafts, still roaring his defiance. Above his body now spoke again and again the weapon of Count Frederick. A half dozen dusky forms fell and filled up the opening. The savages behind gave back and sought to flee.

This instant of their hesitation gave Frederick one more opportunity. Catching Kitty by the arm he passed back to the rear of the little cavern in the hope there might be egress that way—for surely the wall of steel in front could not be passed. He found it—a narrow passageway. Panting and breathless, stumbling, falling and rising, the two hurried on until at length they heard no more in their ears the din of fighting.

The passage way now seemed gradually to rise, its walls closing in. At length, far ahead, they saw a faint tinge of light. It deepened as they advanced, until at length it became visible through a broken aperture beyond which shone the full light of day. Gasping their joy at this, they hurried up and on until at length their feet stood upon the surface of that earth to which they had been accustomed.

It was a strange and new scene which lay before them now. There was no path that they could see—the mouth of the cavern came out at the top of a high cliff. Far below them ran the sea, blue-tinged and rippling out to its horizon. But no sail broke the wide expanse, no path showed down the steep declivity which lay before them. Their case seemed quite as hopeless as ever it had been. If discovered now, they must indeed stand at bay.

The keen eye of Count Frederick searched here and there for some avenue of escape, but at first found none.

"Mademoiselle," said he, 'the beach below, no doubt, leads to one of their villages. But we cannot reach the beach. I presume that we have come almost through the hill—that the main village lies yonder, beyond the forest. If we return, whether by the cavern or by the sea beach, it would mean only death. If only we could find some other place of concealment!"

"Look!" said Kitty, and pointed beyond, at the base of the cliff. A narrow, slitlike aperture showed in the rock wall. "Perhaps there is another cave," said she.

"Hurry," said Count Frederick. "Run and hide yourself there at once."

As she obeyed he set about certain plans of his own. He flung himself down upon the sand at the edge of the cliff, and left a trail, as though he had been flung over and down. Here and there he pulled loose certain shrubs to strengthen that impression in the mind of any pursuer who might come. Then, retreating toward the mouth of the cave where Kitty had secreted herself, he obscured his own trail in the sand as best he could by brushing away the footprints with a broken bough, trusting to the strong wind to complete his own bungling work at covering his trail.

"Mademoiselle," said he, when at length he joined her. "We now have done all that we can do. We have no food, no water, no weapons—" he showed his empty revolver. "All we can do is to wait and hope."

Cowering in their hiding place, they lay for what might have been an hour before they heard the voices of any pursuers. Then they saw emerge along their old passageway the figures of several of the natives, who stood jabbering, weapons in hand, looking this way and that, seemingly too much excited to have much care. One of these ran to the broken trail mark at the edge of the bluff, and, shouting in excitement, returned. With no more ado, and apparently without suspecting the actual trail of the two fugitives, they all now made off to the right, shouting loudly, and disappeared from view—no doubt along some steep path known only to themselves.

"They have gone," said Count Frederick, "and I fancy will not return. They think us dashed to death on the rocks below."

"We might as well be," said Kitty Gray, apathetically. "What hope is there for us now?"

"Courage, mademoiselle!" was his response. "That we have lived through such perils means that there is a purpose for it—one purpose."

"No, said Kitty Gray. "It has been too much. We are lost. There is no food, no water. Even if there were what chance is there for an escape?"

"Even should there never be an escape, mademoiselle, life here with you would be better than life anywhere else in the world without you."

But, utterly worn out, she only shook her head and turned away. Completely exhausted, at length she fell asleep. He spread about her his own coat and kept watch.

Night came at length, and with it its chilling airs. They must have fire, yet a fire might announce their presence there. Count Frederick gathered some bits of dried wood here and there, and at length ventured to build a fire where it would offer warmth within the cave, and where it would be practically invisible from any direction except from the sea. Indeed, he felt that they must take this chance, since only from the sea could they have any hope of escape. Their beacon light would shine widely, and perhaps some passing mariner might see it.

The night wore away, passed as it was in hunger and in chill, with nothing to soften the hard floor of the rocky cavern. There was no breakfast for them, there was not even a drop of water to assuage their growing thirst.

Once more Count Frederick searched out every corner of their narrow refuge ground. To attempt escape directly down the face of the cliff would have been sheer madness. He followed the trail which the natives had made when they passed to the right along the rock wall. Apparently they had descended by swinging from one tree trunk to another. It would be equal to madness for a woman to attempt a descent here—still more hopeless for a woman weakened with hunger and fatigue. He told Kitty the truth, as he now found it.

"Leave me," said she, weakly. "Save yourself."

"Leave you, mademoiselle?" said he. "Never! Not until death do us part shall we be separated."

He read something of his answer in the look in the eyes turned upon him now.

"It is well," said she at length, simply—"we shall live or die—together."

"Together, mademoiselle? Tell me—"

But her hand, raised in sheer weariness, arrested him, calling upon all his chivalry.

"We will be able to endure our hunger for a day, at least," said he. "Our light shines far. Let us devote at least another day to hope. If none comes, why, then we can die."

"Yes," said she, simply, "that comes at last to all. But let us try to hope!"

They faced a second night, endless in length, and faced another dawn—at first they thought a hateful dawn, and no more kind than the night had been. But even as this feeling of apathetic resentment grew in their souls, Kitty Gray raised her lusterless eyes as she heard an exclamation from her companion.

"Look!" exclaimed Count Frederick. "Look! A sail!"

She stared out over the sea. There lay the dearest object that could meet her eyes—a low white fleck, or dot, rising and falling, just inside the rim of the distant horizon. Yes, it was a sail!

"Quick! The fire!" she cried. "We must build the fire!"

Many After Auto Licenses

More than 4,000 applications have been received for 1916 automobile licenses by the Automobile Division of the State Highway Deparment. The new license plates have been received by the Deparment and beginning December 1 they will be sent out to those who have applied for them.

Despite the fact that these new plates are not to be used before January 1, 1916, many inquiries have been received by the Department from owners who desire to use them as soon as they get them.

State Highway Commissioner Cunningham today issued a statement in which he urged on the owners and operators of automobiles the importance of sending in their 1916 applications at once. In previous years the State Highway Department has not enforced the law relative to the use of old license plates on automobiles in the early part of the new year, but Commissioner Cunningham announced that the Automobile Division of the State Highway Department is prepared to send out plates as soon as applications are received prior to December 31 and no excuse will be accepted from owners and operators who neglect to apply for their licenses before the first of the new year.

Unfilled presidential postoffices in Western Pennsylvania have been made known by Postmaster General Burleson Deserving Democrats will be named to these offices soon after the convening of Congress. Information to be had about the White House and Postoffice Department is to the effect that factional lines are not to be drawn so tightly in the future In the past "original Wilson men" have received the preference in appointments. With a presidential campaign approaching and with solid Wilson delegates needed for next year's convention, the olive branch is to be extended to those Democrats who heretofore have not been classed as friendly to the president.

In Westmoreland county, the unfilled offices and their salaries are: Avonmore, $1,200; Bolivar, $1,300; Lagonier, $1,200; Manor, $1,400; New Kensington, $2,500.

"THE SONG OF HATE" AT SANDY HOOK

Some exciting times were experienced by the "Song of Hate" company while, under the direction of J. Gordan Edwards, producer of "The Celebrated Scandal," "A Woman's Resurrection" and "Anna Karenina,' they were making scenes at the gun-proving grounds at Sandy Hook under a special permit from the government. This latest William Fox production, which is based on Sardou's famous "La Tosca," calls for scenes depicting modern military forts and the Sandy Hook reservation, where the biggest guns are tried out, were selected. Betty Nansen, the famous royal actress, who is starred in "The Song of Hate," was much interested in the fortification and during a scene in which she was working strayed away from the rest of the compnay to visit a battery where something interesting seemed to be happening.

Suddenly there was a terrific, earbursting report, an immense gun leaped from its place of concealment almost at the actress's feet and as quickly vanished again The heavy detonation knocked the actress flat, bruising her severely and she was deprived of her hearing for several days by the accident. Attaches of the military hospital found her lying unconscious near the gun and an once rushed her to the institution. In the meantime, Mr. Edwards had missed his star and was much alarmed by her absence till Miss Nansen's whereabouts were discovered. In future Miss Nansen says her idea of no place to take a stroll will be where Uncle Sam makes and tests his "teeth."

"The Song of Hate" will be seen at the Star theatre, Monday night. 1t

GOVERNOR'S PROCLAMATION

Governor Brumbaugh issued the following proclamation setting Thursday, Nov. 25, as Thanksgiving day in Pennsylvania·

"Let us reverently observe our day of thanksgiving, not alone because it is a custom so to do, but because it is a privilege annually to make public acknowledgement of gratitude to God for His manifold mercies and blessings. We are a worthy people only as we are an humble and a devout people. Not to see the guiding wisdom of God in the affairs of men is to be ignorant of the vital controlling force in the uplift of the race.

"We have vouchsafed to us a year of health, plenty and social advance. Our commonwealth has been signally free from calamaties. Our crops have been abundant. Our industries at the beginning of the year were languishing. They are now increasingly prosperous. The deplorable war in Europe may be the occasion of this prosperity. It is regrettable that the misfortune of our neighbors should be the cause of our prosperity. The sooner we reach a sound economic condition based upon a normal competitive market, the better it will be for us. The present situation is one that may well cause us to take heed. The law of love is the only abiding law of progress.

"In the spirit of solemn gratitude that we have been kept from the horrors of war and that we have been blessed of God with material and spiritual good, let us gather together in our several places of worship to take our reckoning, to give thanks for bounteous blessings and to supplicate our heavenly Father for continuing guidance and help.

To this end, and that we may be a wiser and happier people, I, Martin G. Brumbaugh, governor of this commonwealth, do designate and set aside Thursday, Nov. 25, 1915, as Thanksgiving day."

PAIGE
The Standard of Value and Quality

It Is Luxury That Distinguishes The Paige

It was luxury—at an amazingly low price—that swept the Fairfield "Six-46" to acknowledged Six-Supremacy last spring.

But in the new Fairfield "Six-46"—at the new and yet more extraordinary price—$1295—there is even more luxury, more elegance, more distinction.

You will see Luxury in the beauty of the finish, the lasting lustre, the smart red-trimming of the running gear; in the new disappearing chairs: in the magnificent new glaze hand-buffed French leather of the full-hair upholstery; in the elegant new pantasote top.

You will find Paige luxury in the supremely powerful, flexible and silent running Paige Motor; in the miracle of easy riding and ease of coritrol; in electric lighting and starting systems, in all those highest grade features which are combined in the Paige as they are combined in no other car—however much greater the price—and the Fairfield Price is $1295.

Let us add to this the distinctive beauty of design that first made the car famous and unique.

Let us add the prestige which this epoch-making car has been given by the most discriminating motor car owners. Let us add the fact that we have doubled our plant (already enormous) to meet the popular demand for Paige Quality.

Then, perhaps, you will grasp the significance of the Paige distinction—"The Standard of Value and Quality.

Just as supreme among the five-passenger "Sixes"—is the Paige Hollywood "Six-36"—$1095.

The Fairfield, equipped with a most sumptuous winter-top, with permanent roof, removable windows, gray broadcloth trimming—as luxurious as a limousine, $250 extra
